
Revisa Enem

Recommended by:

Brazil: São Paulo

Developer's Description:

[translation] “Students: Video classes, item bank to simulate and resolve questions, advisory services for writing and study plans”¹

Information

Type: Website

Apparently designed for children? Yes

Developer: Revisa Enem

Analyzed by Human Rights Watch

Date: June 2021

URL at the time of analysis:

Link

Was there a publicly available privacy policy at the time of analysis? No

Website Analysis

This website did not collect and send the following data about users to third-party companies²:

To track the user | 1 ad tracker sent data about users to third-party companies

1 ad tracker sent users' data to Google through the domains google-analytics.com

To watch and record the user

Session recording was not detected on this site.

To capture what users type, before they hit send

Key logging was not detected on this site.

To find out who the user is

Canvas fingerprinting was not detected on this site.

To track the user across the internet

No cookies were detected on this site.

This website did not collect and send users' data through these tracking technologies:

Facebook Pixel³ | was not detected on this site.

Google Analytics' 'remarketing audiences' | was not detected on this site.

¹ Translation provided by Google Translate. See: Revisa Enem, "Revisa Enem," <https://web.archive.org/web/20210302130204/https://revisaenem.com.br/> (accessed March 2, 2021)

² A technical analysis does not definitively determine the intent of any particular tracking technology, or how the collected data is used. For example, an EdTech product can include third-party tracking code that collects information that may be useful to monitor the product's performance and stability. The same data collected by the same third-party code may also be used for advertising or other marketing purposes.

³ Facebook rebranded itself to Meta in October 2021. This privacy profile refers to Facebook as both the platform and the parent company, for consistency across the timeline of Human Rights Watch's investigation.